Our Name May Say Research, but...

...Our Foundation Is People

Science doesn't just happen. Every insight, large or small, comes because somebody made it. And that somebody—a scientist—didn't do it alone.

There were technicians who ran the experiments. Accountants who administered the research grants. Human resources professionals who recruited staff members to the labs. Maintenance staff who emptied the trashcans and cleaned the lab benches.

In 2017, scientists at the Oklahoma Medical Research Foundation made discoveries about heart disease, cancer, diabetes and autoimmune illnesses. Those findings, we hope, will one day improve the lives of patients suffering from a host of different diseases.

In these pages, we feature some of the people who made those breakthroughs possible. Many of them have never donned a lab coat. But make no mistake: Without all of them, there would be no ah-ha moments.

Of course, those moments would also be impossible without donors like you. Thank you for your generosity. Like just about anything important, science takes a village. We're humbled that you've chosen to be part of ours.

Chase Pierce

Chef and Lead Food Service Assistant

I really enjoy feeding the people who make the research happen. I've met people from a lot of different countries and cultures, so we've tried to incorporate dishes in our menus that might appeal to them. Like curries. I try to do a lot of different varieties: lentil, chicken, Thai. And I'm open to cooking vegetarian and gluten-free. It forces me out of my comfort zone. I do like making Oklahoma classics like chicken-fried steak every once in a while. They might not be that good for the body, but they're definitely good for the soul.

Finding a Connection

Tania Reyna

Neurologist, Clinical Assistant Member
Multiple Sclerosis Center of Excellence

Very early on, I learned that multiple sclerosis would be my niche. I remember my first year in residency meeting a woman who is still our patient today. She was in her early 20s with two children, and she'd had a terrible relapse. She was in the hospital. I felt a connection to her because we were both young females, and I wanted to try to do something for her. But MS is not like blood pressure. You can't just pop a pill and keep it controlled. So many things can go wrong in MS: motor functions, vision, sensory deficits. It's not a cookie-cutter thing. That's why this is challenging. You must think differently for every patient.

Tips Tania offers her patients:

1. If you smoke, stop!
2. Regular physical activity is important
3. Focus on the positive

Thunder Up

Jon Hamm

Network and Computer Systems Senior Administrator

Outside of OMRF, I do a radio show, "Thunder Insiders," on 107.7 The Franchise. It's analyzing the Thunder, top to bottom. I got my foot in the door talking about salary caps, which are complex rules about how you build your basketball team. Now I do call-in segments during the week, little reports after games, and a show on Saturdays. It's a complete side gig, but it's helped me communicate better with everyone at OMRF. When you're on the radio, you learn that you can't ramble on. You need to get to your point.

Top 3 radio tips:

1. Slow down
2. Say more with less
3. Don't eat (even if you mute the microphone)

My Home Is Your Home

Carlisa Curry

Recruiter

Senior Human Resources Specialist

This past September, our postdoctoral association hosted a neuroscientist from the National Institutes of Health. I picked her up at the airport. We'd made a reservation for her at a hotel, but when we got there, the guy at the front desk said, "I'm sorry, we're fully booked." It was 11:00 at night, and I couldn't find anything else. So, I said, "If you don't mind coming to stay at my house, I have an extra room." I gave her my daughter's room. Luckily, it wasn't a complete mess. But it was definitely not your typical hotel room. Kiara had painted the walls neon green.

Carlisa's job-hunting don'ts:*

1. Use sexybunny94 as your email contact address
2. Ask your interviewer for a hug
3. Ask your interviewer for a high-five

*Each one is taken from Carlisa's actual experiences as a recruiter.

Creative thoughts don't bloom from restrictive guidelines. That's why when I'm coaching grad students or postdocs, I tell them not to let things like word counts stop them from putting their thoughts on paper. You can always edit 4,000 words down to fit a 1,000-word limit. But you have to let it flow and use your creativity first.

Accounting, Records and Payroll

Do I have a favorite song? No, not really. I sang at a funeral a couple of weeks ago. I sang at [longtime OMRF receptionist] Joyce Holley's retirement. I just try to fit the song with what's going on. I've been singing since I was real little. Sometimes it feels inspirational to me. And, I hope, to others.

Science, Not Fiction

Ken Humphries

Associate Member

Aging & Metabolism Research Program

Growing up, I loved reading science fiction. The stories, the creativity, the possibilities. Take Michael Crichton's Jurassic Park. The idea that you could extract dinosaur DNA from a mosquito sounded far-fetched. But even 20 years ago, the capabilities we have now would've seemed like science fiction—the amount of data we're able to obtain so quickly, the high-throughput means of discovery. We can even edit genes. I always tell my son, "To me, the iPad and iPhone are science fiction." We walk around with videophones in our hands. As a kid, that was inconceivable.

On Ken's childhood bookshelf:

1. The Foundation series by Isaac Asimov
2. Lots of Ray Bradbury and Arthur C. Clarke
3. Ender's Game by Orson Scott Card

Chip Morgan

Executive Vice President
Chief Operating Officer

I was starting my junior year at OU, 20 years old, married about one month. My mother worked for John A. Brown's department store in Oklahoma City, and one of her co-workers ran a personnel agency. She helped me get a part-time accounting job at OMRF. I'd come in nights and weekends and post checks to our grants accounts. It's all computerized now, but back then I did it with a ledger, a pen and a 10-key adding machine. Since then, I've done just about everything imaginable at OMRF. Accounting. HR. Facilities. Safety. Purchasing. Technology transfer. Everything except research. I leave that to our scientists, who still amaze me. How did I end up spending my life around all these brilliant people? Forty-nine years here, and I've never worked anywhere else. I'm the luckiest son of a gun in the world.

The Best of 2017

This past year, OMRF researchers published 126 studies in scientific journals, bringing the total number of papers this decade to more than 1,000. In hospitals and clinics around the world, doctors used two different drugs born at OMRF to treat patients suffering from life-threatening blood disorders, and rheumatologists utilized a test developed at OMRF to guide the care of people suffering from rheumatoid arthritis. Meanwhile, two experimental drugs with roots at OMRF—one to treat brain cancer, the other sickle-cell disease—continued to show promise in clinical studies.

Top 5 areas of disease research:

1. Lupus
2. Sjögren's syndrome
3. Cancer
4. Diabetes
5. Arthritis

(Measured by number of 2017 OMRF publications)

Lupus Leaders

A nine-year research study identified two dozen new genes linked to the autoimmune disease lupus. OMRF helped lead the effort, which involved more than 100 scientists and physicians in the U.S., Canada, Mexico, Europe and South America. The researchers analyzed 27,500 DNA samples donated by patient volunteers on three continents.

According to the Lupus Foundation of America, roughly 1.5 million Americans live with the disease. Understanding more about its origins will light the way to better outcomes for patients, says OMRF's

Dr. Patrick Gaffney, a corresponding author on the study. "Now we can start to make connections that could ultimately lead to new drug targets down the line."

The research was published in the journal Nature Communications and brings the number of known lupus genes to 101. OMRF researchers have played a role in identifying or confirming 65 of those.

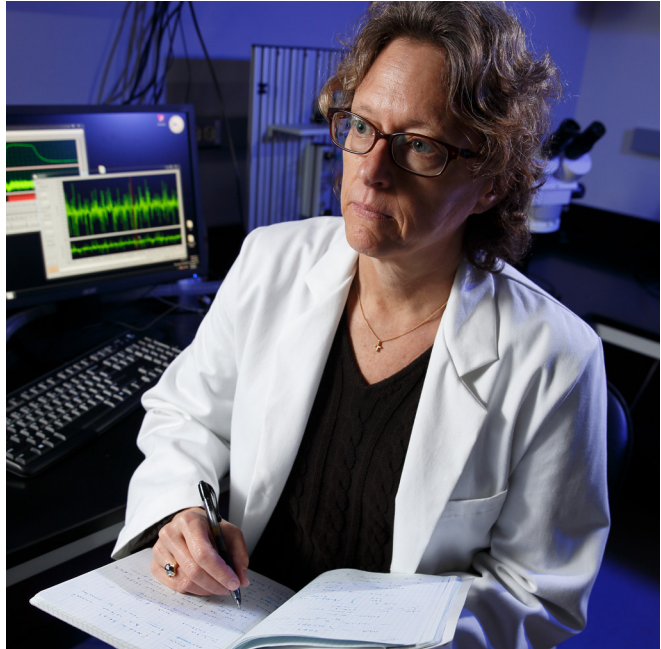

In December, OMRF launched the world's first lupus prevention study. The clinical trial, known as SMILE, identifies people at high risk for developing lupus and treats them with an immune-modifying medication. "As a physician, I have seen the damage that happens with lupus," says Dr. Judith James, who is leading the trial. "Even when patients get all the best medicines we currently have, the disease still leads to deformities, shortened lifespans and things we just can't fix. Now, we may have the ability to dial this back and prevent people from moving into full-blown lupus."

Understanding Alzheimer's

"When we think of Alzheimer's pathology, we think of dementia," says Dr. Holly Van Remmen. But research has shown that the memory-robbing disease can affect parts of the body other than the brain. With a new grant, the OMRF scientist will examine whether Alzheimer's also causes muscle deterioration. "People suffering with Alzheimer's often survive for many years while the disease progresses," she says. "A loss of function can have a profound negative impact on an already declining quality of life."

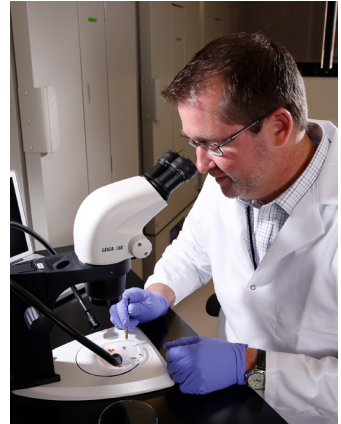

Progress on Colon Cancer

An OMRF research team led by Dr. David Jones made a discovery that points to how colon cancer develops. Published in the scientific journal eLife, the finding could lead to new pathways for drug development for colorectal cancers, the third most common cancers in the U.S. "We're talking about ways of trying to predict who will develop colon cancer, preventing them from getting it and, if they do get it, finding ways to treat it," says Jones. "This is a big step in that direction."

Mouse House

With funding from the Presbyterian Health Foundation, OMRF opened the state’s first germ-free research facility in October. The idea, says Dr. Sai Tummala, is to start with a pristine setting in which lab mice are free of the trillions of microorganisms that ordinarily populate their bodies. “Then scientists can introduce a single microbe or group of microorganisms and see how they affect the mice,” says Tummala, who serves as director of the facility. Already, research has shown that microorganisms may play a role in predisposing us to obesity and a range of chronic diseases. “By knowing precisely which microbes enter the environment, we can learn their specific role in disease.”

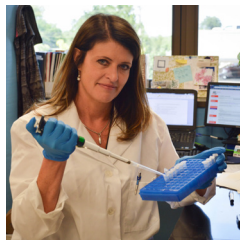

Hearst Grant

The Hearst Foundations made a grant to OMRF to support the recruitment of Drs. David Forsthofel and Gaurav Varshney, two new scientists who specialize in the use of novel research models to study disease. One of the nation’s leading philanthropies, Hearst selected OMRF’s project as part of a nationwide competition that resulted in awards to nonprofit organizations in 24 states and the District of Columbia.

Innovation Award

The Rheumatology Research Foundation presented Dr. Darise Farris with its Research Foundation Innovative Research Award. The award provides the OMRF scientist with a two-year grant to research the origins of Sjögren’s syndrome, a painful condition in which a person’s immune system attacks the body’s own moisture-producing glands, inhibiting the ability to produce tears or saliva.

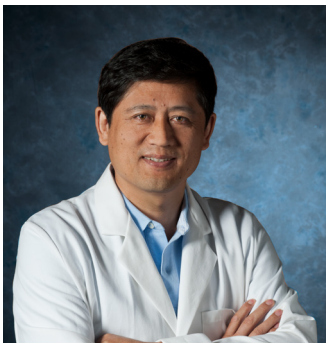

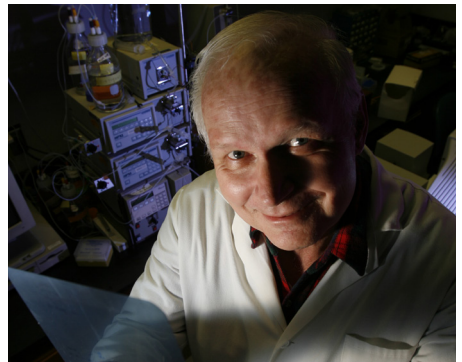

Alternatives for Patients

OMRF's Multiple Sclerosis Center of Excellence won the Labe Scheinberg Award at the 2017 Annual Consortium of Multiple Sclerosis Centers. The award is presented annually to recognize research excellence in the field of neurorehabilitation in MS. OMRF won for its work in telerehabilitation, offering remote alternatives to traditional physical therapy for patients. Led by Dr. Gabriel Pardo, OMRF's MS Center treats more than 2,500 patients suffering from the autoimmune disease.

Partners in Discovery

GSK, one of the world's leading healthcare companies, selected OMRF to participate in its "Discovery Partnerships with Academia" program. Launched in 2011, this highly selective initiative develops innovative medications by combining the insight and creativity of leading academic scientists with GSK's drug discovery expertise. At OMRF, Dr. Charles Esmon will lead efforts to develop novel therapies for acute pancreatitis, lung injury and trauma.

Hope for a Rare Disease

Dr. Lijun Xia found new clues about the origins of a bleeding disorder known as immune thrombocytopenic purpura. In ITP, the body mistakenly attacks and removes platelets, which play an important role in protecting against bleeding. The new findings, published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (USA), could help scientists develop new treatments for the condition, which causes spontaneous bruising and can be life-threatening.

Two Events for One Great Cause

In September, OMRF held its sixth annual “241” fundraiser—two events for one great cause. Country Music Association and Grammy award-winning band The Mavericks headlined a wine and music festival at OMRF, which was followed by a golf tournament at Stillwater’s Karsten Creek Country Club. This year’s events brought the 241 fundraising total to more than $3.8 million since the events started in 2012.

Making New Friends

Dozens of prominent venture capitalists and biotechnology industry executives traveled to Oklahoma City to attend the 2017 OMRF BioVenture Forum. “The goal of the forum was to spark commercialization by bringing in folks who have varying interests so we can get a broad spectrum of ideas and thoughts regarding tech commercialization and investment,” says Manu Nair, who organized the event. “I think it was a success, and partnerships will blossom out of this as a result.”

Leading the Way

In partnership with the American Heart Association, OMRF hosted a STEM education program for 50 local female high-schoolers in October. A trio of female OMRF scientists and other women representing science, technology, engineering and math fields met with participants and led a series of panel discussions about career paths. “The girls were eager to know what it’s like to work in male-dominated fields and how STEM leaders are able to juggle family life along with such demanding careers,” says the American Heart Association’s Debbie Hite Stewart. “The event really seemed to provide an opportunity for the students to think about their futures and what direction they may want to go as they approach high school graduation.”

A group of people, mostly wearing blue t-shirts, are celebrating outdoors. They are jumping and raising their hands in the air. The t-shirts feature a logo that says "CELEBRATING 70 YEARS OF ALUMINUM DISCOVERIES". The background shows a grassy area, a body of water, and a bridge under a clear blue sky.

“It’s quite an honor to be named number one by your own employees.”

Courtney Greenwood
OMRF Vice President of Human Resources

OMRF rang out the year by claiming the top spot in The Oklahoman’s annual Best Places to Work competition in the large organization category. Encompassing 800 employees, rankings are based on surveys conducted by Pennsylvania-based Workplace Dynamics LLC. The firm polled employees across the state on a variety of factors, including pay and benefits, job satisfaction, room for growth within the company and management quality.

How We Spend a Dollar

72¢ Research
20¢ Clinic operations
8¢ Administrative costs

When it comes to administrative costs, less is more. According to the world's largest nonprofit ranking service, our single-digit percentage of expenses for accountants, IT professionals and other administrative employees places us in select company. For the 15th time, Charity Navigator awarded OMRF its highest rating in 2017. "OMRF's exceptional four-star rating sets it apart from its peers and demonstrates its trustworthiness to the public," says Michael Thatcher, President and CEO of Charity Navigator. "People can trust that their donations are going to a financially responsible and ethical charity when they decide to support OMRF."

Donor Honor Roll

OMRF was born in 1946 because of the generosity of thousands of donors. That broad base of support has continued for more than 70 years, and it has served as a keystone of OMRF's scientific success and stability. In 2017, OMRF received gifts from more than 4,000 individuals, corporations and foundations. Each gift matters, and we're deeply grateful for your decision to support OMRF. Your donations today light the way for healthier tomorrows.

Governing and Advisory Boards

As a nonprofit, OMRF doesn't have owners. But we do have 103 individuals who donate their time and talents to help guide and support the foundation through three boards. Our Board of Directors has existed since OMRF's inception and consists of many of the state's most influential executives, public servants and philanthropists. The National Advisory Council, which is comprised of business and thought leaders from around the country with a connection to Oklahoma, was created in 2011 to help raise national awareness of OMRF. Most recently, we added the Ambassadors, a new generation of Oklahoma influencers who volunteer their time and talents to help OMRF.

Top 3 counties by board representation:

1. Oklahoma
2. Tulsa
3. Cleveland
